

Norman O. Brown is psychoanalytical theorist who produced his seminal work Life Against Death in 1959. Despite the early success of his work, Brown's unique take of Freudian psychoanalysis is now relatively unknown. In Life Against Death, Brown draws conclusions from Freud's work which Freud himself had overlooked. Brown sought to dismantle the deadlocks of psychoanalysis by re-interpreting the Freud's most fundamental findings. Brown creates a new ontological theory which encapsulates not only the nature of the individual but the entire cultural spectrum as well as history and time itself. This thesis explores Brown's theory in relation to the work of filmmaker David Cronenberg. Through the examination of Cronenberg's work, with particular emphasis on Shivers (1975), this thesis will explore Brown's deviation from Freud, and prove its viability as a theoretical framework through the study of a film.
