A note from me to you: I love the warmth that a candle adds to any space. The glow of the flame and a luscious scent makes a candle my favourite luxury. Candle making is also a very fun, creative hobby. For me, the pouring of candles is a meditative experience. Each candle I have ever made has been prepared with love, intention and care. Making my own candles and selling them has been a giant learning experience and I want to share what I have learned with you! I made my first batch of candles full of anticipation and despite following the instructions and the finished candles burning brightly; they had little to no fragrance. This wasn't as easy as I thought it was going to be! After six months of testing, I finally found a formula that I was happy with. My candles were creamy, generous and had a magnificent scent throw. I spent the next two years selling them to friends, family and online. Since then, I have seen the numbers of candle-makers grow exponentially. Unfortunately, many of these candle-makers are inexperienced and are making poor-quality and often dangerous products. There is a belief that making candles is easy. It's not. It is a technical skill that requires patience, testing and commitment. There is a lot of knowledge about making candles that only comes with experience and isn't detailed on manufacturers instructions, which is why I have written this guide. I'm going to give you detailed instructions on how to make jar candles, tea lights, melts and more. I'm also going to give you all of my hot tips and advice for setting up your own candle business. I hope that you enjoy making your candles and melts, and that they warm your life as much as they do mine. Lara xx
