

This fascinating and controversial text makes sense of the complexities of research in the workplace and how working knowledge is constructed. Featuring experts from Britain, Japan, North America and Australia, it is an outstanding contribution to the literature of Human Resource Management (HRM). Its interdisciplinary approach addresses key issues and debates such as: * the influences of new technology, language, power, culture and gender upon the construction of knowledge * the impact of globalization * working knowledge into the 21st century * practice and performance implications. Its outlook, geared towards the 21st century, makes it essential reading for researchers, teachers and students within HRM, policy-makers and all those concerned with professional development.
