

The stunning story of a young norwegian soldier who got PTSD and won a court trial against the norwegian government as the first soldier ever. Now available in english. Soldier. UN soldier. Peacekeeping soldier. Peace building soldier. There is something nice, clean and proper about these words. We can imagine a young Norwegian man. Blond tufts of hair under the blue UN beret. Squeaky clean in his uniform with a crisp, blue bandana. All soldiers bring pictures and photo albums home with them. Pictures of their buddies at a tea party with the mayor, of an old man and a donkey, or of children sitting on an APC or straddling a canon. But there are other pictures as well. Memories not found in any photo album. Pictures of violence, mutilation, murder, rape, betrayal, fear and alcohol abuse. Pictures that show what it's like to serve in areas where war is the normal state of affairs, and peace is something that others enjoy. These pictures represent memories that nobody really wants to hear about. Not even the soldiers themselves. But they never disappear. And it is these pictures that this book is about. Yesterday Lebanon, Somalia, the Balkans. Today Afghanistan. Tomorrow Iran? The story is the same " only the place changes.
